this museum's fine and applied art collection is one of the best in the world and it is a fitting place to display a collection of tapestries. Medieval examples include four from Flanders illustrating the 6th Duke of Devonshire's Gothic Hunts and dated between 1426 and 1450.

seven 'cartoons' (designs) by Raphael for tapestries ordered for the Sistine Chapel were bought by King Charles I in 1623 and have been on loan from the Royal collection since 1865. The word 'cartoon' comes from the Italian 'cartone' literally 'a large sheet of paper'. The original design would be reversed on the tapestries because the weavers cut the 'cartoon' into strips and pricked along the outlines with pins. If you look carefully you can still see the holes.

other tapestries come from famous manufacturers such as Mortlake, Soho, Fulham & Lambeth in Britain and from Gobelin and Aubusson on the Continent Chinese tapestry is rich with birds, beasts, dragons and flowers
